Man-trap

A physical access control system for preventing unauthorized access and separating security zones from non-security zones.

A small space where two or more doors are interlinked in such a way that one door needs to be completely locked in order for the other doors to open. A man-trap is mainly used as a system for entry into isolation rooms and clean room. To enter a man-trap, a user with access permissions must go through the authentication process. Once the user has entered the man-trap, they can access the security zone after completing the authentication process again.
